Cameron to heed call?

Director 'happy to accept' invitation to see oilsands' effects: Activist

Avatar director James Cameron's recent criticism of Alberta's oilsands industry has generated another invitation to visit the province to see the situation first-hand.

An Alberta First Nations leader and environmental advocate said he hopes he has convinced Cameron to see the effects of the oilsands.

George Poitras, a longtime opponent of the oilsands, said he had a personal meeting with Cameron in the director's hotel room in New York City on Saturday.

Both men attended the United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, where a special screening of Cameron's environmental-themed blockbuster was arranged. The Ontario-born Cameron also took part in a panel discussion on indigenous issues.

Poitras, the former chief of the Mikisew Cree who live near Fort Chipewyan, north of Edmonton, said he invited Cameron to visit Alberta to see what he calls the environmental "devastation" of the oilsands industry.

"He was happy to accept the invitation," Poitras said yesterday in a phone interview from New York, though he noted that no formal arrangements for such a visit have been made.

"He was very interested and he wants to learn more about it."

Cameron couldn't immediately be reached for comment.

It's the second invitation Cameron has received to look at the oilsands. Premier Ed Stelmach recently said the director should come to the province to see areas of oilsands developments that have been reclaimed or hear about the careful monitoring of the industry — perhaps even take a canoe trip.

The famous director has said while he doesn't know much about the oilsands, he knows they're a "black eye" on Canada's image as an environmental leader.

Alderman blames tech for 911 hang-ups

KRISTA SYLVESTER
krista.sylvester@metronews.ca

COUNCIL Blame it on the technology.

Council is set to discuss a notice of motion today from Ward 13 Ald. Diane Colley-Urquhart calling for an extensive report on 5,000 monthly 911 dropped calls, but Ward 8 Ald. John Mar wonders if it's necessary.

"I will hear the motion out, but I believe that many of the dropped calls are simply because of technology, not a misuse of the system," Mar said yesterday.

Mar sits on the police commission with Colley-Urquhart.

Mar said for example, people with BlackBerrys can often hit the emergency call button without even knowing it.

"There are over a million people in Calgary, and a hundred or two hundred thousand BlackBerrys, so that can really add up. My take on it is that it's simply technology."

The city receives about 450,000 911 calls a year and the public safety communications centre says about 10 per cent of those are hang-ups.

Repeated attempts for comment to Colley-Urquhart went unanswered.

Crash leaves 3 in critical condition

Three people remain in critical condition in a Calgary hospital, according to Airdrie RCMP, after a head-on collision on a slushy and slippery road outside the city north of Calgary. Police say a 31-year-old female driver of a Hyundai Elantra, her four-month-old son and a 28-year-old passenger were struck by a GMC truck driven by a 30-year-old Airdrie man. The truck driver suffered non-life-threatening injuries. Police are investigating. METRO CALGARY

Regiment marks 100 years

JESSICA PICHE
for Metro Calgary

Three soldiers from the King's Own Calgary Regiment were honoured as part of the celebrations for the regiment's 100 years of service yesterday afternoon.

The Sacrifice Medal, presented to members of Canadian Forces wounded or killed in action, was received by the family of Cpl. Nathan Hornburg.

Cpl. Mark Fuchko and Master Cpl. Sean Markwell, both wounded in Afghanistan, were also honoured.

The medal presentation concluded the day's events, which included military demonstrations and the march of over 50 members of the regiment from the Mewata Armoury to St. Stephan's Church and back.

The celebrations also honoured the Calgary Highlanders and the 14th Service Battalion, along with marking St. George's Day.

The King's Own Calgary Regiment Cadets march at a celebration of the regiment's 100 years of service yesterday.

Big Rock Breweries has donated specially commemorated bottles of beer featuring art work of the armoury on the label to honour the soldiers. The bottles are not available to the public; however, they are expected to become a collector's item.

"For the guys, it's a big deal," said Capt. Malcolm Day. "It's kind of like a birthday present."

The three units will jointly march for the public on May 29 on the Currie Barracks Parade Square to conclude the centennial celebration.

This will be the last public parade on the square before it is renovated.

A successful weekend for Woman's Show

KRISTA SYLVESTER

EXPO You wouldn't know we're in a recession if you hit the Calgary Woman's Show this weekend, according to show organizers.

Show manager Karen Cooke said "thousands" of women, and even some men and kids, walked through the 18th annual spring show this weekend.

"People were out in droves, and exhibitors too. There are women carrying shopping bags all over the place. People are spending money," Cooke said of the success of this year's event.

"It's really grown a lot and our spring show is almost as big at the fall show now."

Fashion shows were a popular draw this weekend, and Cooke said many men even took in the experience that featured both local designers and big industry names.

Make a stand for funding by taking a seat at Pumphouse Theatre

KRISTA SYLVESTER
krista.sylvester@metronews.ca

ARTS Take a seat for culture.

The stage has been set for a showdown between Pumphouse Theatre supporters and city council today as the theatre's clique descends upon council chambers to plead for more funding for a future expansion, according to theatre executive director Scott McTavish.

"We're hoping council will reconsider the committee decision that denied another $2 million in funding in April," McTavish said.

McTavish expects about 100 or more supporters to show up at council for the theatre's Take a Seat for Culture campaign.

Tie vote

- The Pumphouse funding request lost on a 5-5 tie vote in committee, but needed eight votes to pass in council.

"We know people are busy but even if they can come take a seat for 10 minutes and leave, that would be a great show of support," he said.

Ald. Ric McIver hopes council can give the theatre enough money to make their plans known and said council can discuss the rest of the money later.

Bill would add two voting days

ELECTIONS The Harper government wants to give Canadians more time to vote in federal elections.

Steven Fletcher, minister of state for democratic reform, will re-introduce legislation today to increase the number of advance polls and expand voting hours.

The Expanded Voting Opportunities Act would amend Canada's election laws by adding two more advance polling days during elections.

Those extra days would fall on the two Sundays before an election.

The bill would also open all 65,000 regular polling stations on the Sunday before election day.

Commons committee awaits Jaffer associate

A giant dryer that zaps the moisture out of kitchen scraps — and even human waste — and transforms it into odourless fuel seemed like just the type of renewable energy project that Rahim Jaffer and his partner were looking to work with.

But how exactly they handled their interest in the BioDryer technology, and in other green projects they were dabbling with, is at the crux of the controversy surrounding the duo's company.

A would-be business associate of Jaffer's, Nazim Gillani, will weigh in on Wednesday about what he knows about Jaffer's business and alleged lobbying.

Nazim is expected to tell a House of Commons committee that he believed Jaffer, a former MP, was selling lobbying-type services through his firm.

Afghan girls poisoned?

Dozens of Afghan schoolgirls have fallen ill in recent days after reporting a strange odour in their classrooms in northern Afghanistan, prompting an investigation into whether they were targeted by militants who oppose education for girls or victims of mass hysteria.

Either way, the reports from three schools within three kilometres of one another in Kunduz province have raised alarm in a city threatened by the Taliban and their militant allies.

The latest cases occurred yesterday, when 13 girls became sick, Kunduz provincial spokesman Mahbobullah Sayedi said. Another 47 complained of dizziness and nausea the day before, and 23 fell ill last Wednesday. All complained of a strange smell in class before they fell ill.

"I came out from the main hall, and I saw lots of other girls scattered everywhere," Anesa, a nine-year-old who was hospitalized briefly Sunday, told The Associated Press. "Then suddenly, I felt that I was losing my balance and falling."

None of the illnesses was serious and the girls were only hospitalized for a short time. The Health Ministry said blood samples were inconclusive and were being sent to Kabul for further testing to determine the cause of the illnesses.

"This is a matter of concern not only for us, but for the families," Sayedi said, blaming the sicknesses on "enemies" who oppose education for girls.

Signs target lead-footed drivers

I was driving along Elbow Drive the other day when I got accosted by an electronic sign telling me to slow down. I hadn't realized I was going almost 10 kilometres faster than the posted speed limit. I must not be the only one with a heavy foot because the Limit Your Speed campaign has located 14 of these signs throughout the city.

The sign has made a difference. Elbow is a long stretch of straight road and it can be tempting to push the speed limit a bit, but since the sign has been installed, I pay a little more attention to my speedometer.

The solar powered radar boards are aimed to do just that — get drivers' attention. Installed in residential neighbourhoods, the signs flash "slow down" and show the posted speed when it detects vehicles exceeding the limit.

Along with the signs, banners have been posted throughout the city with key messages. The messages are what are driving the campaign: That 25 per cent of fatal crashes involve speeding, and speeding just 10 km/h more than the limit increases the risk of death or injury by 73 per cent.

The statistics in Alberta support the need for the campaign. In 2008, 2,928 people were injured and 107 people were killed in collisions where speeding was ruled a factor.

It's a tough campaign to sell, though. Speeding is glamorized in television, movies and car advertisements. Faster cars carry more prestige and just last May, one driver was clocked at more than 200 km/h just outside of Calgary. A similar case caught headlines not even a year earlier. In August 2008, a $12,000 speeding fine was issued to a 34-year-old man who was caught ripping down the highway at 263 km/h — more than twice the posted speed limit.

If it's not about showboating or the thrill factor, then it's often a time crunch that can motivate the pedal nearing the metal. Getting to your destination in a sprawling city like Calgary can take a frustratingly long time. Shaving off a few minutes by speeding is a time-saving strategy that's hard to resist.

Not only is it dangerous, though, it carries the risk of a hefty fine, from $89 and more. Last year, 278,933 speeding tickets were handed out in Calgary.

The city's campaign launched this month, speed awareness month, and will run for six months at a cost of about $100,000.

Adrienne Beattie is a Calgary-born writer who has covered urban issues since 2001 and has an English degree from the University of Calgary.

Film sets are wasteful places, actor says

It's not easy being green on a film set, says Colin Firth. "It's a wasteful place," admits the Oscar-nominated actor.

"It is not ... because film people are free of conscience and they don't care about the planet. It's a very panic-stricken environment a lot of the time."

Firth says there are people in the film industry who will do anything to get a take on time.

"You get directors who say, 'Make the kid cry, get the scene right,'" he says with a laugh. "Things get wasted, thrown away, replaced. Whole sets go to landfill. Food gets laid out for the banquet scene and sprayed so it looks good but you can't touch it or eat it.

"The waste (even) to people who have no environmental conscience at all is pretty staggering to witness."

Firth was in Toronto over the weekend to accept an award, with his brother-in-law, for his support of the environment.

They received the inaugural International Entertainment Award award from the Green Living/Environmental Media Association at the Green Living show, attracting a large crowd of environmental enthusiasts and Firth fans.

The Environmental Media Association is trying to mobilize the entertainment industry to educate people about environmental issues and inspire them to take action.

The association invented the concept of the "green carpet," the idea of taking a hybrid or alternative fuel vehicle, not a limo, to high-profile awards events.

Firth, his wife Livia, and her brother Nicola Giuggioli co-founded Eco Age in 2007, a London-based store that sells environmentally sensible products and offers consulting support to businesses on how to operate in a green way.

Email trouble for Goldman

Trader rushed to bet against mortgage market, message shows

As the U.S. housing market turned downward in January 2007, a Goldman Sachs trader wrote in emails to a woman he apparently was courting that investments he had sold were "like Frankenstein turning against his own inventor."

"I'm trading a product which a month ago was worth $100 US and today is only worth $93," wrote Fabrice Tourre, who was charged along with the bank in a civil complaint filed this month by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission.

"That doesn't seem like a lot but when you take into account ... (the investments) are worth billions, well it adds up to a lot of money."

Tourre was talking about investment products like the one at the heart of a federal complaint against his firm.

For Tourre, the investments were like an invention gone awry: He had started arranging them when the market was on the upswing. But he continued selling them after the market turned — now with Goldman betting against them, in one case allegedly misleading investors about a deal's origin.

Goldman Sachs CEO Lloyd Blankfein

Goldman Sachs Group Inc. released that email and 25 other internal documents Saturday in response to a U.S. Senate panel's release of messages in which Goldman executives boast about money they were making as the market imploded later in 2007.

When credit rating agencies downgraded many billions of dollars of mortgage-backed investments in October 2007, Goldman executive Donald Mullen was unabashedly pleased.

"Sounds like we will make serious money," Mullen wrote to Michael Swenson, another executive, in one of the emails released by the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

Goldman has argued vehemently it did not profit from the mortgage meltdown.

Swenson and Tourre, along with Goldman CEO Lloyd Blankfein, will face a public grilling on Capitol Hill tomorrow from the subcommittee.

Corporate Canada poised for strong earnings growth

REBOUND Earnings from more than one-quarter of Canada's blue chip companies will be released in the coming week, painting a picture of corporate Canada's rebound from the depths of the recession last year.

CIBC economist Peter Buchanan is predicting 45 per cent year-over-year growth with the materials and financial sectors leading the way, based on a compilation of analyst estimates.

"It's consistent with some of the other (economic) indicators that Canada's recovery has moved up a notch in the last quarter or so, so it's certainly a positive sign," he said.

Buchanan said if companies meet analyst expectations it will be the largest year-over-year increase since the first quarter of 2003, when the economy saw a sharp recovery. But, he cautioned, the results will benefit from extremely weak year-ago results.

First-quarter earnings reported so far have "absolutely burst out of the gate," said Douglas Porter, deputy chief economist at the Bank of Montreal.

"The underlying recovery seems to be progressing faster than the market and analysts expected."

HST confusion lingers

Uncertainty remains over who will benefit most

In the market for a gym membership or a new car? Pondering the purchase of a new bike or a bigger house?

Better buy post-haste, say advertisers hoping to cash in on the harmonized sales tax that takes effect July 1 in Ontario and British Columbia.

The looming HST has given rise to some innovative marketing, and experts say it's likely to boost sales in the next couple of months, even though it's still far from certain which items will actually jump in price.

"We think consumers are still totally confused," said Vancouver-based Bruce Cran, president of the Consumers' Association of Canada.

> "We think consumers are still totally confused."
> Bruce Cran, consumer advocate

"There isn't any reliable source of information for us to make our decisions on."

Purchasers of homes costing more than $525,000 will definitely be hit with tax hikes, there's no definitive list of what else will cost consumers more. The tally for services like hair cuts, accounting and funerals will likely rise, but it's unclear if goods like furniture and electronics will go up, down or stay the same.

HST-backers suggest retailers should be able to actually lower prices once the provincial sales tax they now pay out is no longer in effect, and they pass along the savings.

One company advises the public can save money by pre-purchasing season tickets to the theatre before it's required to start collecting HST.

"It's expected businesses would promote those types of sales," said Tatiana Chabeaux-Smith, a spokeswoman at Consumer Protection B.C. "There doesn't seem to be anything deceptive — it's a sales tactic."

Democrats pessimistic about finance reform bill

VOTE The U.S. Senate's top negotiators on financial overhaul legislation said yesterday they were not optimistic about striking a bipartisan agreement on key features of the sweeping bill before a showdown vote today.

Sen. Richard Shelby, the top Republican on the Senate Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee, predicted all 41 Republican senators would vote to delay the start of debate, unless continuing weekend talks led to a deal.

So close

- Sixty votes are needed to begin debate on the bill — there are 59 Democrats and Democrat-allied independents.

Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell said he didn't expect the bill, as drafted by Democratic Sen. Chris Dodd, the chairman of the committee, would go forward.

Colourful line of work

BERNARD WEIL/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Alice Chu has an eye for colours.

When most of us see Michelle Obama in a yellow dress or watch the blue-green world of Avatar, we think: that looks cool.

Alice Chu sees next season's popular colours.

Chu was good at art as a child and worked hard to get better so she could attend university. She was born in Shanghai and moved to Taiwan with her grandparents to escape communism (her parents and sister stayed behind); getting into school was very competitive.

By the time she'd finished her degree, both her grandparents had passed away. With nothing to keep her in Asia, she went to Columbia University in New York for a masters in art. But being a fine artist wasn't for her. "I thought to myself: 'If I just paint, it's not a career that can provide me with a job and money.'"

A summer job at a graphic design firm solved that problem. After she met her husband, she moved with him to Boston, then to Montreal after he got a job at McGill University. Since graphic design work was often sporadic, she decided to do her teaching diploma at McGill in 1972.

She began teaching in the visual arts department at Dawson's College. Then a job posting at Ryerson in 1977 caught her eye. She moved to Toronto, seeing her husband every two weeks and during the summers.

Chu was a bit unsure at first: the job was teaching basic design, but in the school of fashion.

As the years passed, Chu became increasingly interested in fashion, and in particular, colour. She observed how strong coloured, fashion-forward garments pull people into stores, but they often purchase conservatively hued pieces. She wondered about favourite colours: do people like certain colours because they're appealing, or because they look good in them.

Chu began writing about these issues and discussing them with her students. In the late 1980s, she joined Color Marketing Group. This U.S.-based non-profit has members from a range of industries, including interior design, that meet twice a year to discuss which colours are popular and to guess what will be hot in upcoming seasons.

It then publishes the group's predictions. Fabric manufacturers and paint companies then use these colour predictions to help formulate new products.

To develop her own theories of what's the next hot colour, Chu's always observing what's going on in pop culture, politics, the economy and big events. She's always looking at fashion magazines and what people are wearing whens she travels.

Chu's not always spot on. She says guessing colour trends is like predicting the weather. "If you're right 80 per cent of the time, you're OK."

Diane Peters once hawked magic pens at the Canadian National Exhibition. She's now a writer and part-time journalism instructor.

Create a personal brand when out looking for work

MAT LECOMPTE
for Metro Canada

A jobseeker's mentality is key to finding a job. By thinking like a business, it's possible that more businesses may come a knocking.

A fair question is what, then, does thinking like a business require? To organizational expert and entrepreneur Jane Woolsey, it will require an organized approach and developing a brand.

"It's all about standing out," she explains. "Employers will want to investigate someone that's taken the effort to go the extra mile. If there are 100 resumes in front of an HR manager, you're going to stand out from the crowd. You've only got one chance."

Woolsey suggests those on the job hunt adopt the mantra that looking for a job is full-time work. The hunter should schedule their day in blocks, inserting time for follow-ups, resume tweaking, phone calls and looking at various resources. Scheduling time in an organizer is recommended so the hunter can have a visual reference point to guide them. Also, she says the hunter must know what kind of work they are looking for.

"If you don't have a plan, you'll be all over the place," she warns.

Jane Woolsey

In this market, however, she indicates that organization may not necessarily be enough. It's also important for hunters to create a personal brand.

Creating a personal brand involves consistency and personality. She says you'll want to create business cards with colours and fonts that look professional, while complimenting your personality. The colours and fonts should be consistent with the letterhead used for cover letters, resumes, envelopes and follow-up notes.

This may sound expensive, but it isn't. Stationary company Avery has put out a new DIY line that allows job seekers and small business owners to design high-quality branding tools for minimal prices. Some of the software is even free. Take a look by visiting the web site at avery.ca/diy.

As a business owner and organizational expert, Woolsey offers the following tips to help job seekers successfully land the job they're looking for:

- Change your voicemail so it sounds professional
- Crank up the privacy on your Facebook account
- Research the companies you'd like to work for
- Create folders on your computer for each company where you sent an application. Save the posting, resume and cover letter you send, as well as scheduling your post-interview follow-up.
- Bring a notebook and prepare questions for your interview.

Helping women get to the top

Women may finally be climbing the corporate ladder faster and in greater numbers than ever before, but as Marcia Reynolds, Psy.D cautions, don't be a managerial lemming.

In her recent book Wander Woman: How High-Achieving Women Find Contentment And Direction, Reynolds points out that despite grabbing opportunity, not all of those employment acquisitions are beneficial.

"I did an informal survey with a group of professional women world-wide asking, 'Would you take a job to fill a quota?' The majority said yes, (feeling) this was the only way to make the changes to give women a voice at top levels and open doors to the women behind them," she notes. "Although many would say that this is necessary to break down the control of the male elite, would you take a position based on filling a quota? This offer doesn't sound attractive to me."

An instructional book designed to develop and assist both current and aspiring female leaders in attaining/maintaining high-profile leadership roles, Wander Woman challenges those potential allowances in an effort to help women achieve managerial status on the basis of ability, professionalism and knowledge, not genus.

To that extent, Reynolds illustrates that companies must invest in their own future by re-aligning current executive mindset; eliminate hiring to "fill allocations" and establish stronger foundations of female employees moulded into management material beforehand, not as they assume the corner office.

"If leaders don't have enough qualified women to promote, they should work on how they develop them (management training programs, working with coaches/mentors) and create corporate cultures that appeal to top female performers. This process might be slower than imposing quotas but it's likely to get more buy-in from the women themselves."

Similarly, onus is not entirely on organizations. Those striving to take on leadership roles must ensure they have the skill set for senior positions, lest they be seen as attaining titles they were thrust into. Such perspectives only create tougher challenges in proving merit or escaping negative, conceivably envious co-workers.

"Women have to be responsible for their own development. If their companies don't offer training and mentoring, they should seek it on their own," Reynolds asserts.

Coyotes force another game against Wings

(Series tied 3-3)

Coyotes 5 Red Wings 2

The Phoenix Coyotes were at their best when they were up or down a skater, or two, and that gave them a chance to survive for at least one more game.

Phoenix scored its first three goals on special teams and Ilya Bryzgalov made 31 saves in a 5-2 win over Detroit yesterday that forced Game 7 in the first-round series.

"They won the special-teams battle," Red Wings coach Mike Babcock said. "That sucked the life out of our team."

"Any time you can play in a Game 7, it's a game you'll remember," Coyotes coach Dave Tippett said.

Detroit would love to forget how Game 6 started.

The Coyotes were called for three penalties in the first 4:42 — including a pair that put them down two skaters for 1:09 — but they were the only team to score in the opening period.

Detroit defenceman Brad Stuart nonchalantly carried the puck out of his end, Lauri Korpikoski snatched it and scored a short-handed goal 4:10 in to spark the win.

Canucks advance

(Canucks win series 4-2)

Canucks 4 Kings 2

Daniel Sedin scored the tiebreaking goal with 2:03 to play, and the Vancouver Canucks rallied from another third-period deficit to finish off their first-round series against the Los Angeles Kings with a 4-2 victory in Game 6 last night.

Roberto Luongo made 30 saves while keeping Vancouver close in its third straight victory over Los Angeles, and Kevin Bieksa tied it early in the third period for the third-seeded Canucks.

Sedin then skated in to collect a loose puck and snapped a shot over goalie Jonathan Quick, sending Vancouver to the second round of the Western Conference playoffs for the third time in four seasons.

Drew Doughty and Alexander Frolov scored and Quick stopped 18 shots for the sixth-seeded Kings, who struggled to finish close games in their first playoff appearance since 2002.

Steve Bernier scored an early goal for Vancouver, and Alex Burrows put his first goal of the post-season into an empty net with 1:07 left.

Mikael Samuelsson failed to score a goal for the first time in his remarkable series, but still earned two assists — including an accidental helper on Sedin's decisive goal when he apparently broke his stick on a slap shot — to finish with 11 points.

Vancouver roared into the second round, possibly to meet Chicago for the second straight year, after trailing in the third period of Game 4 while Los Angeles had a 2-1 series lead.

The Canucks dominated the series' next 80 minutes, scoring four goals to win Game 4 at Staples Center before routing Los Angeles 7-2 in Game 5 at home on Friday night.

Vancouver finished the series on a 15-5 run over the final seven periods. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Let's drink to salt of earth

Organic winemaking catching on fast in Canadian vineyards

Wine can make people think of a lot of different things, especially good food, good friends and good times. Increasingly you can add another good to the list — good environmental stewardship.

Organic wines, which avoid the use of pesticides in grapes and is produced through sustainable farming practices, is becoming a more frequent presence on Canadian liquor store shelves.

The environmentally conscious consumer does not have to make a sacrifice to drink green wine. According to Hillary Dawson, president of the Wine Council of Ontario, there is no difference in taste or quality between organic and non-organic products.

Many winemakers are making efforts to grow their grapes using environmentally responsible and sustainable methods.

Although there has been an increase in demand for organic products from consumers, Dawson says the decision to go organic goes much deeper than a business one. "It's not a need, it's a want," Dawson says. "Growing grapes requires a real deep connection to the soil."

The amount of green products available to the consumer might be even greater than it appears, according to Dawson. Although many producers use organic techniques to make their wine, Dawson says that the certification process to be recognized as organic is "onerous." As a result, a lot of farmers don't bother.

"There are a million ways to show that you are sustainable," Dawson says. "I'm just proud that our producers are doing what they can to practise in ways that will ensure the long-term sustainability of the industry."

However, one winemaker that has gone through the process of organic certification says that it is important to do so. Bruce Ewert is the proprietor of L'Acadie winery in Nova Scotia. He says that there is only one way that consumers can be sure that they are getting an organic product — look on the label for certification.

"With marketing you can say anything," Ewert says. "When you put it on the label you know that a third party has been involved. It gives it credibility." METRO NEWS SERVICES

Good friends, good wine and clean environment go hand in hand.

Rise of biofuels linked to food shortage

CROPS The increasing use of biofuels could drive millions of people in the developing world deeper into poverty and hunger, warns a leading humanitarian organization.

London-based charity Action Aid denounced that vast fields in Africa, South America and India are currently dedicated to the production of biofuel crops such as wheat and corn, instead of food for local communities, leaving thousands at risk of starvation.

Tim Rice, Action Aid's biofuels adviser and author of a recent report on its impact in the developing world, said:

"As you put more and more maize and wheat into the biofuel chain, food prices are going up. We anticipate that if biofuels continue on their current path to 2020, this could drive hundreds of millions of more people into hunger."

Activists also say fertilizers used to grow the crops release large amounts of nitrous oxide, a gas 300 times stronger than carbon dioxide. METRO WORLD NEWS

Ballsy move to raise cancer awareness

A young Nova Scotia-born filmmaker and photographer is preparing for an epic personal journey across North America, pushing a seven-foot rubber ball ahead of him to bring attention to testicular cancer.

"I've always had big ideas and been kind of out there," said Thomas Cantley, who got the diagnosis last year that would make most men cringe.

"Everyone's always told me I was ballsy even before I got this," he said following recent surgeries to remove his left testicle and several lymph nodes.

Cantley, who now calls New York City home, plans to create a documentary called Ballsy out of his travels, interviewing health care professionals and cancer survivors along the way.

"I'm 27. I never even had a cavity. I've always been healthy, then I'm told I have testicular cancer," he said. "It didn't really even hit me at first."

Cantley said he'd been in pain for months before he decided to seek medical help last fall. "I want to create a movement for men's health because men just don't go to the doctor as often as they should."

"I'm 27. I never even had a cavity. I've always been healthy, then I'm told I have testicular cancer." Thomas Cantley

His testicle was removed in New York but the lymph node surgery was done when he returned home to Nova Scotia.

The Vancouver Film School graduate said he wanted something therapeutic to keep him focused through the ordeal so he decided to shoot his surgery.

The idea for the Ballsy project began taking shape as he lay in recovery and had a chance to talk to a 17-year-old boy who was just about to undergo the same surgery.

"I had no idea. He just really impacted me. Before I got testicular cancer I had no idea about this. It turned into a personal project to create awareness," he said.

Eddie Izzard exposed

British stand-up comedian brings Stripped tour to Canada

KEITH CARMAN
for Metro Canada

In his high-heels, lipstick and earrings, there's no mistaking Eddie Izzard.

Yes, the 42-year-old British stand-up comedian is a transvestite, an issue he's addressed many times during various performances. Discerning between types of cross-dressers ("weirdo" versus "executive") and asserting that many men in women's clothing are in fact heterosexual, after 20 years as a comic, film and television star, Izzard is well beyond justifying his looks.

Not that it matters anyway. Slick, self-assured and quite intellectual, as Izzard delves into his shows, the initially shocking visual aspect quickly evaporates as one becomes enraptured in his alluring ability to regale with engaging tales steeped in history and hilarity.

"I always say I talk about everything there ever was ... with gaps," he smiles, referring to his penchant for relaying factual situations with a humorous twist. "(Comics) have to talk about something and if you have no point of view on anything, you end up doing dick jokes or mother in-law jokes which is incredibly boring. You have the pressure of talking about something but if you can articulate a point of view, you can talk about absolutely anything. I discovered history which was waiting to be used."

British stand-up comedian and noted transvestite, Eddie Izzard.

Taking that modus to its extreme on his latest tour dubbed Stripped, Izzard reveals plans to discuss everything from God — or the lack thereof — to old people dying in their beds, Greeks and Romans, Egyptians, cavemen and more. He notes that the show is yet another wealth of information delivered with sincerity, brevity and most importantly, humour.

"I saw a professor lecture on a subject that I'm interested in and it was incredibly boring. There was too much detail and it was monotone. I break it down: 'There were these people and they were f—ed up. Then these people came along and they were really f—ed up.' I cut it down and make it more street-accessible. Hopefully I'm not offering lessons so much as observations, though."

"I've performed in about 40 or 50 arenas so far, so Canada's getting it when it's in good shape ... I'm ready to talk more rubbish." Eddie Izzard

Still, as any devout Izzard fan knows, despite a general outline, there's always the potential for Stripped to careen off the rails nightly. Continually succumbing to his own tangents and affection for improvisation, Izzard often becomes so caught up in entertaining unscripted tales he becomes lost. "Where was I?" is as much a fixture of Eddie Izzard shows as his shocking appearance. At that, Izzard reveals that even with a host of items to discuss on Stripped's Canadian stint, he can't be sure exactly where it will go.

"Anyone gets bored with doing the same thing over and over again so I ad-lib as much as I can in every show (but) this show is well up to speed. I've performed in about 40 or 50 arenas so far, so Canada's getting it when it's in good shape ... I'm ready to talk more rubbish."

Kate Nash's funny side

British singer's second album full of catchy, clever style

PAT HEALY
Metro World News

Kate Nash begins My Best Friend is You, her sophomore effort, in the same Hitsville UK territory that defined her debut. But that's just a point of departure. And oh what a departure it is.

By the fourth song, I Just Love You More, she's screaming, shivering and cooing against a guitar that sounds borrowed from the Breeders.

"Well, I kind of wanted to mix it a little bit between the pop and the weirder stuff," says the singer.

"(The lyrics) are kind of funny. It's not like I find them hilarious, but they are silly little things."
Singer Kate Nash

She says to achieve this mix, she paid a lot of attention to the album's sequence.

"I had to work on figuring that out for quite a while," she says.

"Some of it really I thought was kind of funny to do, like after I Just Love You More coming straight with Do-Wah-Doo."

That she comes back to the friendly Motown neighborhood with songs like Do-Wah-Doo will ensure she doesn't alienate the fans that her debut Made of Bricks earned her in 2007. It's just that she puts these nuggets of primal energy in between the catchy and clever material.

And yes, all of the silly, yet vulnerable expressions of jealousy are here as well.

"I bet her feet don't even stink," she sings of the subject in Kiss That Girl.

"I try not to take myself too seriously, and they are kind of funny," Nash says of lyrics like that.

"It's not like I find them hilarious, but they are silly little things that you do kind of get pissed off about."

If that pissed-off feeling is beneath the surface in her poppier numbers, it's all out on display a few songs later in Mansion Song, which begins with a cuss-filled rant that ramps up to a breathless fever by the second minute.

"I was just thinking I wanted to do something like that because I'm interested in other styles as well and want to experiment," she says.

That's not the only experimental thing Nash has going for her. She's been playing with a punk band called The Receeders on the side.

"It's the first time I've really written with other people," she says, "so it opened me up, maybe made me a little bit more relaxed.

"And I'm playing bass as well, so I'm thinking differently about how the songs are written."

Judging by the sheer variety of her new album, it's clear that Nash is thinking differently about a lot of things.

Eliot Spitzer doc hits N.Y. streets

Ex-governor skips premiere

FILM A much-anticipated documentary about former New York governor Eliot Spitzer premiered at the Tribeca Film Festival.

Though many of those interviewed for the film were in attendance Saturday evening, the documentary's subject was not. Director Alex Gibney, whose Taxi to the Dark Side won the 2007 documentary Oscar, interviewed Spitzer four times over the two years he spent making the film.

Though it was billed as unfinished and doesn't yet have a title, Gibney said the film was "mostly finished." He made the film in tandem with author Peter Elkind, whose book Rough Justice: The Rise and Fall of Eliot Spitzer was recently released.

Ashley Dupre, the former call girl involved in the scandal, was not interviewed for the film. Gibney told the audience she asked for editorial control, which he refused. Messages left with representatives of Dupre late Saturday night weren't immediately returned.

Among those interviewed on camera were former CEO Cecil Suwal of the Emperor's Club VIP escort service and Spitzer rivals former New York Sen. Joe Bruno and Kenneth Langone, the former director of the New York Stock Exchange.

Gibney said he also discovered the identity of another prostitute, Angelina, whom Spitzer frequently visited. She wouldn't be interviewed on camera, though, so Gibney hired an actress to read her answers in character.

Spitzer's wife, Silda Wall Spitzer, didn't grant an interview for the documentary.

Eliot Spitzer

Often sitting on a couch in a suit with his legs crossed, Spitzer looks directly into the camera as he tries to explain why he continued to visit prostitutes before resigning in 2008.

"You cave to temptations in ways that seem easier and perhaps less damaging," he says.

The documentary tracks Spitzer's meteoric rise in New York politics and his crusades against Merrill Lynch, AIG and the New York Stock Exchange.

The film also raises questions about the investigation into the Emperor's Club, suggesting that political motives may have been behind the investigation.

Gibney said Spitzer had not yet seen the film but is expected to soon.

California court rules in Polanski case, but no end in sight

CRIME Roman Polanski's loss of a crucial California court decision sets up his return to the United States more than three decades after he fled a statutory rape charge, Swiss legal experts said Friday.

However, they predicted months of further legal wrangling before extradition.

Caught up in the complexity and political sensitivity of the case, Switzerland has yet to issue a decision on delivering the fugitive Oscar-winning filmmaker to Los Angeles prosecutors nearly seven months after his arrest.

Swiss authorities have cited the voluminous paperwork and said they would wait out a California court's examination of whether Polanski could be sentenced in absentia for having sex in 1977 with a 13-year-old girl.

But the U.S. court rejected Polanski's sentencing request Thursday without an opinion.

While his attorneys could still appeal to the California Supreme Court, legal experts saw little basis for Swiss authorities to reject handing over Polanski.

VITTORIO ZUNINO/GETTY IMAGES
Fugitive filmmaker has been on house arrest at his Swiss chalet for seven months.

"Extradition is likely now," said Dieter Jann, a former Zurich prosecutor. "Not much has changed, and Switzerland has a legal obligation here."

The Swiss Justice Ministry said Friday it wouldn't rush a decision since it still must receive and study the ruling by the California 2nd District Court of Appeal. Polanski's lawyers have argued he shouldn't have to be present to be sentenced on one count of unlawful sexual intercourse, saying he should be let off with time served.

Polanski's American attorneys have not outlined their next step.

Asked whether the director of Rosemary's Baby, Chinatown and The Pianist would continue to fight extradition, his French lawyer Hervé Témime said, "I think so," but declined to answer specific questions.

The Swiss arrested Polanski on Sept. 26 on a U.S. warrant as he arrived in Zurich to receive a lifetime achievement award from a film festival.

The Swiss imprisoned him for over two months before moving him to house arrest on $4.5 million bail at his chalet in the luxury resort of Gstaad.

Michaels hospitalized

Poison frontman suffers brain hemorrahage

Bret Michaels is in critical condition suffering from a brain hemorrhage, his publicist said Friday.

Joann Mignano confirmed a report on People magazine's website Friday that said the former Poison frontman was rushed to intensive care late Thursday after a severe headache.

The report said doctors discovered bleeding at the base of his brain stem.

Mignano said tests are being conducted and that no further information was available.

The 47-year-old reality TV star had an emergency appendectomy last week after complaining of stomach pains.

He said on his website that although the surgery "has taken its toll," doctors expected him to make a full recovery.

Michaels starred on the VH1 dating show Rock of Love and is a contestant on Donald Trump's NBC reality show, The Celebrity Apprentice.

Trump said in a statement Friday that he was "deeply saddened" to hear of Michaels' condition.

"He's a great competitor and champion, and I hope he will be fine," Trump said.

Hantz is charged with battery

LEGAL Police in Louisiana say Survivor contestant Russell Hantz is charged with simple battery after being accused of shoving a woman to the ground.

Lafayette police say Hantz was booked into the parish jail early Friday after the incident in downtown Lafayette. The woman was not seriously hurt.

Officers on patrol nearby were flagged down and interviewed several witnesses. Hantz was released later in the day. It could not be determined whether he had an attorney.

Hantz was runner-up in the Survivor: Samoa series and is currently on the series Survivor: Heroes vs. Villains on CBS.

Death of Osmond's son ruled a suicide

The death of the 18-year-old son of U.S. singer Marie Osmond has been ruled a suicide, according to coroner officials in Los Angeles, BBC is reporting. Toxicology results showed drugs or alcohol did not play a part in the death of Michael Blosil, who jumped from an apartment building in February. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Don't start spouting off music trivia around Harlem unless you want to be corrected.

Harlem know their musical history

Oldies influence evident in latest album

PAT HEALY
Metro World News

Speaking with the members of the Austin trio, Harlem, in their hometown over Bloody Marys is like flipping through an encyclopedia.

In addition to the absurd cultural touchstones they bring up, the musical acts that come up in conversation include ABBA, Buddy Holly, Slash, the Cure, Bone Thugs-N-Harmony and the Black Crowes.

"I ran into that guy one time," says singer Michael Coomers of Crowes frontman Chris Robinson. "I had just read an interview where he had said something to the extent of, 'I invented punk rock,' and I was like 16, with a little mohawk or something, and I said, 'You didn't invent punk rock, you're a douchebag,' or something sh—y, and my girlfriend looked back and said that Kate Hudson was holding him back from beating me up."

This is as apt of a representation of Harlem's attitude as anything. They know their history and they feel very strongly about it, and their approach is aggressive, but somehow comical at times.

Their new album, Hippies, features songs in a style that Metro has dubbed "Oldies on Drugs"; tunes that owe their structures to 1950s and early '60s rock'n'roll but will effortlessly include cuss words and drug references.

"If I could be your darlin' you've gotta start fallin' for all the bullsh—that I give you," sings Coomers in the track, Be Your Baby.

"There's only so many patterns that you're gonna hit with that six-stringed piece of wood," Coomers says.

- At a show at last month's SXSW conference, filled with industry types, bassist Jose Boyer and drummer/guitarist Curtis O'Mara hassled the photo-snapping crowd members to clear the front so their fans could dance. "Are you going to take a picture and dance to it later?" hounded O'Mara. Boyer says dancing fans can be trouble, too. "Some girl got her shoe stuck on his guitar," he nods to Michael Coomers. So it's a Catch-22: With fans crowding the stage and creating mayhem, or it's people standing still with their digital cameras? "I'd definitely prefer the first one," says Coomers.

Don't rush to judge Simpsons

TELEVISION The animated television characters of Homer and Bart Simpson have been used to educate students about a wide variety of topics, from philosophy to the law.

The Public Legal Education Association of Saskatchewan is counting on "D'oh!" moments with school kids. Jonas Kiedrowski, who created a newsletter, combed through Simpsons episodes to find examples of legal issues he could present to students in a fun way.

In one episode, Homer sues his boss, Mr. Burns, for hitting Bart with his car and demands $1 million in damages. Kiedrowski says Homer's lawsuit makes outrageous legal claims; and, in the end, he gets nothing. The lesson? The evils of frivolous lawsuits, which the legal educator says use the legal system as a means of making money, not of meting out justice.

Among Alberta's Vulcans, Mr. Spock raises V salute

SCI-FI Mr. Spock came home Friday, ironically by boldly going somewhere he'd never gone before.

Leonard Nimoy, the actor who turned the sci-fi science officer into a pop-culture icon on the TV series Star Trek, made his first trip to the town of Vulcan, Alta., south of Calgary, to be honoured by throngs of fans decked out in pointy ears and Starfleet tunics.

"I have been a Vulcan for 44 years," Nimoy said to cheers and applause. "I figured it was about time I came home."

Vulcan was the name of Spock's home planet on the 1960s show that has since mushroomed into a multibillion-dollar global phenomenon of movies, games and memorabilia.

The 79-year-old icon arrived and was immediately whisked into the Vulcan Tourism and Trek Station, a futuristic circular building epitomizing the town's fascination with the show and its determination to turn it into a tourism cash cow.

Leonard Nimoy

Nimoy was the star of a parade, had his handprint immortalized with fingers spread in the famous Vulcan V and got the key to the town.

He told the town his famous character had taken him all over the world, gotten him inducted to the space hall of fame, and helped him shoot far past his dream of simply making a living as an actor.

"In all of these experiences I have never had an experience quite as touching as I'm having here today."

More than 2,000 fans screamed hysterically as Nimoy spoke, shouting that he's loved by the town and always welcome to come back home.

"A living legend. I think he's the sexiest man on television, ever," said Christine Desjardins, who sported a red starfleet tunic. "Then and now. Can't beat him."

Tammy Dann slathered on sparkling green body paint from head-to-toe to look like an Orion slave girl from the original television series.

Nimoy said he agreed to come to Calgary for a comic convention this weekend, with the decision to make this a "side trip." He said he first learned of the Alberta Vulcan when he saw an Internet story last year about how townsfolk were lobbying to host the world premiere of the latest Star Trek movie. They weren't successful.

LiLo let-go and let-down

WONDER WHAT WONDERFULLY TRAGIC THING SHE'LL DO TO GET HER "CAREER" BACK ON TRACK? Lindsay Lohan has been dropped from the upcoming film The Other Side because she isn't bankable, a source close to the production tells TMZ.

The source says the film's finance folks were growing nervous about the actress and her spotty work record.

The film's writer/director, David Michaels, would only say, "Our team simply chose to move on from Lindsay and we'll soon be announcing a replacement."

Someone else doesn't trust Lindsay, although for different reasons. Michael Lohan paid a visit to daughter house in L.A. Thursday, bringing along the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department. He came to check on his younger daughter, Ali, 16, who is staying with Lindsay, according to people.com.

After officers inspected the house and interviewed Ali, they left her with her older sister.

"I went to the police department concerned about Ali's welfare," Michael Lohan told Hollyscoop.com. "I wanted to check on Ali. I want to make sure she's okay. She's 16 and she doesn't belong there. She's a minor."

Of the incident, Sheriff's Department spokeswoman Nicole Nishida says: "Michael Lohan called the West Hollywood Sheriff's and was concerned about the welfare of his (teen) daughter who was with Lindsay Lohan — I don't know if they were living together. Sheriff's deputies went out to Lindsay Lohan's apartment and were given access by Lindsay Lohan and determined that for the (teen) as well as for Lindsay, there was no danger at all. A report was taken and that was it."

Want sauce with that?

CREATING LUNCH-LADY FANTASIES FOR TEENAGERS ACROSS THE CONTINENT Jennifer Lopez has "offered" herself up for a guest role on Glee, reports female-first.co.uk.

The singer-and-actress — who stars in new romantic comedy movie The Back-up Plan — admitted she plans to take on more funny roles in the future and has been in talks with Glee producers about having a cameo on the show.

She said: "I was like, 'Yeah, yeah whatever. I'm a huge fan. Whenever you want ... I'm good.' I kind of offered myself up."

When asked by U.S. TV talk show host Ellen DeGeneres this past Friday about when fans could expect to see her in the musical drama, Jennifer admitted the only issue was timing.

She said: "I sat down with show creator Ryan Murphy and we talked me doing something on Glee. We want to. We want to do it.

"They have it all mapped out for the next, like, eight episodes, whatever is airing right now. So he's like, 'Let's wait and do it really right when you do come on.'"

If she does appear on the show, it is thought the 40-year-old star would play a cafeteria lady at the fictional McKinley High, with her character being given a makeover from Chris Colfer's character Kurt Hummel.

Today, KELLY CLARKSON is getting royal treatment in Malaysia, PARIS HILTON has a new hobby, JIM CARREY insists he isn't high, and CONAN O'BRIEN is infiltrating Twitter.

@kelly_clarkson Police escorting us from airport-hotel, brings 2 questions to mind. Who do they think is n the car? How upset will they be when I get out?!

@ParisHilton Who likes scrap booking?

@JimCarrey Because I'm free thinking, some wonder if I'm stoned, but drugs though fun at times, have always brought my creativity 2 a grinding HALT!

@ConanOBrien I'm sending a tweet from inside Twitter HQ. I'll bet those hot girls in high school wish they had slept with me now.

Three's company?

NOPE, THREE'S A CROWD. UM, WELL, YES Charlie Sheen has moved back into his home, and has reportedly brought his mistress with him, prompting Brooke Mueller to move out, according to Radar Online.

"She doesn't want to sleep in the same house with him she's so disgusted," a source says of Mueller.

"Their relationship is dead. Brooke wants a payout."

Metro Recipe of the Day

Broiled Shad with Mushrooms

INGREDIENTS:

700 g fresh (or frozen and thawed) shad, sole, or flounder fillets
1 tbsp butter or margarine, melted
1 tbsp lemon juice
1 tbsp finely chopped yellow onion
1 tbsp drained prepared horseradish
1 tbsp Dijon mustard
1/4 tsp salt
1/8 tsp black pepper
1 tbsp butter or margarine
2 cups sliced fresh mushrooms

METHOD:

1. Preheat broiler. Rinse fish and pat dry. In small bowl, stir together 1 tbsp melted butter, lemon juice, onion, horseradish, Dijon mustard, salt, and pepper.

2. Place fish on lightly-greased broiler pan rack. Tuck under thin edges of fillets. Brush with lemon mixture. Broil 5 inches from heat 3 to 6 minutes or until fish flakes when tested with fork, brushing once with lemon mixture.

3. Meanwhile, in medium-size skillet, melt 1 tbsp butter over moderate heat. Add mushrooms and cook 3 minutes or until tender. Serve mushrooms on top of fish.

ARIES ♈
MARCH 21-APRIL 20
You may be inclined to fear the worst but you are also intelligent enough to know that it's pointless worrying about things you cannot control.

TAURUS ♉
APRIL 21-MAY 21
It can be a mistake to try too hard to get along with people, not least because the more you try to please them the harder they are to please.

GEMINI ♊
MAY 22-JUNE 21
Something you have been working towards for many months will begin to bear fruit this week, making you glad you stayed the distance.

CANCER ♋
JUNE 22-JULY 22
You can handle anything that life throws at you. Yes, anything. It does not matter how tough the test you face today you will come through.

LEO ♌
JULY 23-AUG 23
You may feel obliged to commit yourself in some way, either to a family member or to a friend, but you really don't have to.

VIRGO ♍
AUG 24-SEPT 22
Keep a sense of perspective over the next 24 hours. You will see that a relationship won't collapse just because you have had a minor disagreement.

LIBRA ♎
SEPT 23-OCT 23
Routine matters are easy to ignore but can be difficult to put right if you let things slide too far. Take advantage of today's work-related influences.

SCORPIO ♏
OCT 24-NOV 22
The week ahead will be highly productive for those born under the sign of the scorpion, but you still need to pace yourself sensibly.

SAGITTARIUS ♐
NOV 23-DEC 21
There may be something of a personal nature that you want to be getting on with but if others demand your attention you will have to put them first.

CAPRICORN ♑
DEC 22-JAN 20
At some stage today you will be struck by a wonderful idea and you must make a detailed note of it right away.

AQUARIUS ♒
JAN 21-FEB 18
Will things get better in your life? Of course they will, starting from this very day, this very minute and this very moment.

PISCES ♓
FEB 19-MARCH 20
Focus your energy in a single direction and don't let anyone distract you from what you know you should be doing.
